Sweden: unnoticeable stability

✓ EU - Yes, Euro zone - No

Sweden has been a EU member since 1995, but euro is not used as a national currency. Sweden has no plans to reject the Swedish krona in the nearest future. This has a positive impact on the banking system of the country and protects Sweden against negative effects of the financial problems other EU countries face.

✓ Economy and infrastructure are focused on foreign trade

Despite the high level of taxation for companies and individuals, many well-known Swedish companies have achieved global success due to the fact that the export activity in Sweden is free and largely unregulated by a state.

✓ High standards and quality of banking services

According to EU directives Swedish banks remain relatively low commissions both for EU and international payments. Swedish biggest banks are financially strong and well-capitalized compared with many other European banks.

✓ Simple respectability

Lack of political risk, stable economy and banks you can trust are the components of the international success of Sweden. The country doesn't tend to advertise the opportunities for international business as other European countries do. This fact mainly identifies the high-status of the state image for both entrepreneurs and official bodies in other countries.
